

Waite Family 2016 Annual Report

Inside this issue:

Barry Quits His Job and Goes into Consulting	P 2
Margie Works a Bunch	P 1
Alex Nears Completion of Master's Degree	P 2
David Paints His Way out of a Corner	P 2
Nicks Smells Like a Dog	P 3
Hagrid Looks Like a Dog	P 4
Printer Failure Delays Christmas Greeting

Our Mission Statement

Monetizing our holiday assets in a client-centric and value-added elven experience that focuses on creating family synergy across our mission-critical application of gingerbread quality as we create cross-platform gifting solutions through new industry fudge paradigms and best wishes to all for the new year.

Family Continues to Meet or Exceed All Metrics

As part of the family outreach program, the entire Waite team traveled to Seattle for some time with the extended family. Team-building exercises included a ferry-boat ride, a visit to Pike Place Market or the nearby art museum for those more civilized (everyone but Barry), a day in Snohomish, and much amusing time with family patriarch Grandpa Hayes, whose dry wit has not diminished.

Maintaining the highest level of cultural sophistication, some or all of the family members attended concerts by Weird Al Yankovic and Boy George with Culture Club. Both were accompanied by the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra, further demonstrating the family's high standards.

In October, Alex paid for David to fly home to see the game between USC and Colorado. This would surely win him the "best brother award" if he weren't already David's only brother. Margie was made aware of David's visit when he jumped in her car, leading to much motherly happiness. The game itself was in the blisteringly hot sun, and the Trojans pulled out a close victory. Plans for the family to attend the Rose Bowl were thwarted by ticket scalpers who bought all the tickets in 20 seconds (truth!). The family will be at the Rose Parade to cheer for all the bands and commune with a million other people along Colorado Blvd.

Capital projects for the year included completion of the canine containment fence at home for Hagrid, who no longer runs away.

Margie Shows Management Creativity

In order to reduce office headcount while not releasing any employees, Margie organized an office road rally. Those employees who were not at the end of the rally by the required two-week reporting period were considered to have abandoned their jobs, thus not only reducing headcount but also increasing the percentage of staff with a high capacity for map reading.

Margie is continuing in her role as the VP of Accounting and Controller for Bristol Farms. She maintains the highest quality in ensuring that 2+2 always equals 4. Should another answer be needed, the result will take one additional hour.

Alex Prepares for Graduation

As he enters the final semester of his master’s degree program in civil engineering, Alex continues his internship with Brown & Caldwell. Due to the proprietary nature of his work, this report cannot detail his efforts, but it can clearly be said that he maintains a high level of trust with upper management and has greatly impressed his colleagues with his extraordinary baking skills above and beyond his engineering abilities.

Following last year’s off-campus housing with seven international students, he downsized to an apartment with a mere two room-mates. They were pleased that their unit was chosen by the housing company as the display unit. Their place was chosen because they had real furniture and cleaned on a regular basis.

Barry Moves Forward

Following 29 years with the City of Carson, Barry retired and moved into the consulting realm. While it has taken adjustment to realize the city’s problems are no longer his, the result has been a strong improvement in his health and happiness. He is currently working on a variety of projects, with his primary client being a company dealing in software for public and private water and wastewater utilities. Consulting offers should be directed to the sales office.

His longer term goal is to work as a cowboy at a dude ranch sharing salty tales of the old west around the campfire with the guests.

Barry has taken up stand-up comedy, to the immense surprise of everyone. He has appeared with his class at the Comedy Store in Hollywood twice. He avoided flying debris from the patrons on both occasions.

West Coast Dave Waite

David is entering the final semester for his bachelor’s degrees in fine art and environmental design. He has mastered the skills of going without sleep in the design studio and painting large self-portraits in the middle of the night (see illustration). Following graduation, he plans to take five minutes off and then get back to work. He is spending his winter break doing commissions and catching up on sleep.

Speaking of sleep, the self-portrait at right was done in the middle of the night as a class project. He later painted over it, explaining “I needed the canvas.”

